“Transforming the Public Service to Meet Modern Day Challenges”

Speaker 2: Challenges of Innovation in Small Island States

Associate Professor Graham Hassall, Director Pacific Islands Programs, School of Government, Victoria University of Wellington in New Zealand spoke on the challenges of innovation in small island states. He highlighted some factors driving public sector innovation in the Pacific Island Countries (PICS). He observed that one predominant influence has been the global trend away from traditional forms of bureaucratic institutions and behaviour, toward modules of “new public governance” and “new public sector”, which place emphasis on responsiveness to citizen concerns and on the delivery of results. Another global driver of innovation he identified is the application of ICT – information and communication technologies – to the conduct of government (e-Government). He observed that in Pacific Islands’ context these global trends, combined with current expectations concerning “deeper regional integration”, require central agencies – and PSCs in particular – to set clear goals for innovation. He said that one constraint, however, is that innovation can only succeed to the extent that public sector institutions are already performing well. He suggested that the next stage for public sector development in PICs should focus on refining institutional settings and on their efficient functioning. This, in turn, requires refinement of feedback mechanisms and shared knowledge management platforms. Discussions highlighted similar issues shared by various jurisdictions in the Pacific - post colonial mentality, ways in which ICT has been used, public sector leadership versus political leadership and differences in generational groups within the public service.

COUNTRY PRESENTATIONS ON THE TRANSFORMATION EXPERIENCE

The Niue Experience

Mr Justin Kamupala, Executive Director of Transformation presented the Niue experience. He said that Niue faces certain realities that maybe distinctly different or more pronounced to the issues faced by other public services within the region, and these will always have an impact on how it operates such as:

- Small population base: limited resource pool in terms of qualifications, capacity, expertise and institutional knowledge.
- Retention: The ability to retain key personnel or those with particular skills from emigrating elsewhere or retaining them within their particular fields of expertise;
- Limited financial resources: which promotes the need for strategic planning, but it limits the ability to actively pursue and engage personnel with appropriate skill sets or calibre.
- Global Labour Market: the limited ability to compete with overseas employment opportunities and the adverse implications that it has on Human Resource Development.
- Initiatives such as the 4 day week: creating efficiencies

- Professional and Technical Scale: Targeting professional and skilled staff
- Endeavouring to bring about the development of a culture of constant and critical self - review of all aspects of the work of the public service, so that there is a constant drive for self-improvement

These are some of the initiatives that the Niue Public Service Commission will be implementing in the months and years ahead which are hoped to address the particular challenges that it faces.

In the discussions that follow, the Commissioners commented on Niue's retention strategies and the innovative 4 day working week.

The Cook Islands Experience

Ms Daphne Ringi, CEO of the Cook Islands Public Service Commission shared with the Conference the newly approved Cook Islands Public Service Strategy 2015-2025 which was developed in response to the Cook Island Government's vision to ensure that the people of the Cook Islands enjoy the highest quality of life and achieve their aspirations through an effective and efficient Public Service. Extensive public consultations highlighted the need for reinvigoration of values and the national identity of Cook Islanders. Among other national development issues such as depopulation and weak parliamentary oversight, public sector reforms which complement political and private sector reforms were identified.

The Cook Islands public sector was found to be fragmented and costly with 52 entities. The Cook Islands Public Service Strategy 2015-2025 which was approved recently by the Cook Islands Cabinet addresses the issues of Public Sector Transformation across two key streams of “people and structures” with recommendations on, inter alia, localization of the public service, leadership and development, service wide induction program, establishment of a comprehensive human resources management framework with performance at the core and structural and operational reforms.

Speaker 3: Leadership and Transformational Change

Professor Franco Gandolfi, Dean of the University of the South Pacific's Faculty of Business and Economics said that passion is prevalent in successful organizations and that it drives vision which in turn drives strategic intent. He talked about the pervasiveness of change and the relentless need for innovation while holding steadfast to ‘unchangeables’. He observed that all transformation is change but that not all change is transformation which is a process of metamorphosis that required a change in perspective where leadership is characterized by charisma, inspiration, intellectual stimulation and individual considerations.

Pacific Public Service Excellence Award Working Group

Mr Parmesh Chand, Permanent Secretary, Fiji Public Service Commission and Chair of the Service Excellence Award Working Group said that the resolutions of the 11th Conference with regard to the Service Excellence Award were not further progressed and that on balance it appeared that a Regional Service Award may not at this time be a sustainable proposition. He emphasized the need to remain focused on improvements on efficiencies, productivity and service delivery culminating on service excellence in each jurisdiction and he noted that it may be more practical and viable for a facility such as PICPA to develop its capabilities as a Centre to be able to promote service excellence in member countries through exchanges of information, personnel and programs, training and advisory services and twining of countries who have sustainably implemented service excellence programs with those seeking to introduce such a program.

Speaker 4: Meeting Modern Demands through Evaluation

Mata'afa Dr Desmond Amosa, Capacity Development and Training Advisor of the Pacific Islands Centre for Public Administration said that the results of public sector transformation efforts in the past to improve public service delivery have remained equivocal due to the absence of systematic and comprehensive policy evaluation. He said that the theme of the Conference on transforming the public service to meet modern day challenges is timely and advised that transformation initiatives should be based on relevant and adequate evidence which require countries to engage effectively in evaluating its policies as a matter of priority for various reasons. He said that the evaluation process binds public officials with members of the community through dialogue to identify the needs and wishes of the community, resulting in what Moore (1995) refers to as “public value”. He further said that this consultation process results in policies that work according to the wishes of the community.

In the discussions that followed the conference agreed that the issues raised were timely and highlighted that the collection of data and evaluation are critical for an effective public service. It was agreed that there is tension between conducting evaluation robustly on the one hand and having them done quickly with practical outcomes.

Speaker 5: Managing Performance in the Public Sector to Meet Modern Day Challenges

Ms Saluma Hunt, Director, Saluma Human Resources Ltd said that managing performance is relevant tool in order for organisations to have long term survival. There is not much difference in same or similar products and services that organisations offer but how employees carry out their job functions is where significant differences lie. Motivating and recognizing performance that is over and above expectation on a consistent and ongoing basis in the public sector will put the organization in better position to meet modern day challenges. Focus on all tasks that support the four perspectives of the Balanced Scorecard is critical however small but if not done well they are what will make a difference between a high and low performing organisation. It was also highlighted to celebrate success and show gratitude to our employees more.
